Advertisers and Consumers Be Cautious when Buying and Selling Livestock and other Items Online

The Alabama Department of Agriculture and Industries (ADAI) urges producers and consumers to exercise caution when purchasing cattle through social media platforms, following reports of fraudulent listings involving livestock sales. Recent incidents have involved fake profiles posing as legitimate cattle operations, advertising heifers for sale online. In some cases, buyers have traveled to pick up the purchased cattle, only to discover the operation had no knowledge of the transaction. These scams have extended beyond state lines, highlighting the need for increased awareness.

ADAI encourages all prospective buyers to conduct proper due diligence before purchasing livestock online. This includes verifying contact information, requesting references, confirming the legitimacy of the operation and being cautious with financial transactions. Buyers should also be aware of warning signs, such as artificially generated images of cattle that may appear realistic but are not the actual livestock. These signs include:

- Unnatural details in the animal such as misshapen bodies, missing tails, uneven legs, distorted faces or irregular ear and nostril shapes.
- Inconsistent backgrounds where fencing, grass or barns appear warped, repeated or unrealistic.
- Overly "perfect" appearance that looks too polished to be real.
- Blurry or uneven edges around the animal, especially where it meets the background.
- Duplicate or reused images of the same animal in multiple locations.
- Missing context photos such as no images of the full herd, facilities or handling areas.
- No identifying marks such as brands, ear tags or coloring that would normally distinguish real cattle.

ADAI recommends other state departments of agriculture, farm bureaus, cattlemen's associations and other agricultural stakeholders spread awareness of this issue and protect producers across the agricultural industry. Anyone who suspects livestock fraud is encouraged to report it to the Alabama Law Enforcement Agency's Rural Crimes Unit at 334-288-8328 or the Alabama Securities Commission at (334) 242-2984.

PLEASE NOTE a specific name used for fraudulent emails inquiring about items for sale in the Online Farmers and Consumers Bulletin is Daniel Kemphues, email address danielkemphues@gmail.com. Please do not correspond or accept any offers from this email address. This name and email address has been used in multiple states as a scam.
